Commercial artist Kim Howell created her first God's Pocket several years ago for her two young children, then ages four and six. "I had recently found a personal relationship with God and wanted my kids to have one with our Father, too."

"I made them a little pocket and told them that it was for God." Kim gave the children scraps of paper with instructions to write down or illustrate any problems, hopes or concerns. They could then turn them over to God by placing the scraps in His pocket. "They couldn't really write yet so I told them that God would understand their pictures and scribbles just as if they had written them down," explains Kim.

Impressed by her children's appreciation of the God's Pocket, she quickly realized what an incredible spiritual tool it was. "We all try to turn over our concerns to God, but we usually end up taking them back. I realized that the God's Pocket was a wonderfully tangible way to physically give my concerns over to God!"

Shortly thereafter, Kim made a more permanent and decorative version of the God's Pocket out of fabric for herself. She made a few more and gave them as gifts. In no time friends were asking for God's Pockets and their popularity began to grow. "Everyone who saw one, wanted one. It was incredible!" exclaims Kim.

Churches around the country started ordering them by the dozens. A Chicago congregation gave them as gifts to all newlyweds married in their church. Others gave them to friends and families in crisis. "I'm still getting calls from around the world from people who want to thank me for the God's Pocket and to tell me how it has significantly changed their lives for the better. I can only tell them that God has intervened."

"When I realized the power of the God's Pocket, I prayed for guidance from our Father and He answered." Kim points to the day she found out that a patent for her concept would cost $2500. "I laughed out loud and said, 'Father, if you want a patent for this, you're going to have to come up with some cash!' Within two minutes, I was on the phone with a friend who offered to be a silent cash partner!"

Howell says she experienced the same sense of intercession when a representative of Argus Communications approached her about obtaining the rights to her God's Pocket.

"My friends and family advised me to keep the rights, but God had made it clear to me that the Pockets should be spread to as many people as possible — as soon as possible. Argus is in a much better position to do that than I am. As usual, He knows what He's doing and He does it well!"
